Among the giraffes, zebra and gazelles that roam the vast African savanna, perhaps the most remarkable creature is the ostrich. Standing about 2.5 metres tall and weighing up to 155 kilograms, the ostrich is the largest bird in existence. No one can fail to be awed and fascinated by the bird's great height, powerful legs and beautiful fluffy feathers.

Like the camel. The ostrich tolerant of high temperatures and thrives in desert country. It also has strong luxuriant eyelashes which protect its large eyes from the dust of the bushel. Its legs are long and sinewy in its feet are strong and flashy. Seeing the ostrich strutting about in the open plains, observers are amazed, feeding on almost anything that creeps or crawls. It also dines on insects, snakes, rodents, roots and most vegetation. Because of its great size and weight it cannot fly. However, its muscular legs are powerful enough to make it one of the fastest creatures on earth. Running across desert country, it can attain speed of up to 65 kilometers an hour! This extraordinary swiftness and its long distance stamina enable it to outrun many of the fastest four-legged predators with ease.

The eggs of the ostrich are the largest in the world and can weigh up to 1.5 kilograms each. Prized for its size and delicious taste, each egg is the equivalent of 25 hen eggs. The shell is hard and glossy and has glazed porcelain like finish. The empty shell is sometimes used as a container by Bushmen for storing water.

In the 14th century, ostrich feather became highly valued by fashion conscious Europeans. Yet, hunting the ostrich was not easy, since the bird has very keen eye sight and swiftly flees from danger. Consequently, the ostrich was not in danger of extinction at that time

SECTION C: SUMMARY

Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions on it

The dramatic increase in life expectancy globally towards the end of the twentieth century has renewed interest among scientists and layman alike in the subject of longevity and ageing process. This lengthening of life expectancy has been one of the greatest achievements of humanity. It was in recognition of this fact that the United Nation formally designated 1999 as the “international year of older persons”. Demographers tell a surprising story: octogenarians and older people, instead of the young, now form the fastest growing population on earth.

What then are the factors that determine man’s health and length of life? Recent studies have identified some of these. It is known that the sounder your habit, the longer your life may last. Nutritionists have told us that we are what we eat, that is to say that what we eat influences the state of our health. Instead of over eating, one should eat a balanced diet including fruit and plenty of vegetables. Moderate physical exercise on a regular basis is of immense benefit. The family doctor should be consulted on how much exercise and what type are most appropriate for each individual. Studies have shown that simple exercises in and around the home help the elderly to regain strength and vitality.

The adage ‘use it or lose it’ applies not only to the muscle but also to the mind. Mental exercise keeps the brain’s “telephone lines” alive whereas mental decline or serenity starts the moment person retires and decides to take things easy in the erroneous belief that doesn’t have to keep up with the world anymore. Many retired civil servants fall into this bad habit. They can change this unhealthy attitude by being actively engaged in reading, travel, education, clubs, professional associations etc. it is believed that such activities not only lift the spirit but also ‘rewire\’ the brain.

In addition to these is the environment. In many developing countries, the environment poses grave dangers to health often resulting in preventable deaths. Access to clean safe water is severely limited. There are huge mountains of refuse breeding vermin, cockroaches and disease causing germs in both rural and urban areas. All this contributes to the low life expectancy in these countries. Better sanitation, safer water for all and a reduction of vermin in the home will improve man’s environment, bolster his health and extend his life-span

Finally, man has made a breakthrough in controlling the genetic makeup. A decade or so ago, he had no control whatsoever over his genetic engineering. Now, he re-design his genetic constitution to ensure better health and longer life.

Questions

1. In ix sentences, one for each, state the factors that improve man’s health and life-span.
